MESSAGE FROM THE BOARD

At the start of FY20, the Board never imagined the twists and turns ahead. As a dynamic, resilient organisation with passionate and capable staff, WIRE was well positioned to step up to the challenge presented by a global pandemic. We have delivered the same services, but adapted them to meet the needs of our service users.

We are very proud of all our staff and volunteers – led by the impressive CEO, Julie Kun – for their adaptability, resilience and skill in providing much needed support to the Victorian community.

We are grateful for the significant contributions our volunteers made to our service delivery prior to the COVID-19 restrictions preventing them from doing so. We look forward to welcoming all of them back.

In response to the impacts of COVID-19, many of our partners came forward and offered much needed support. We are greatly appreciative.

The pandemic has brought particular challenges on women, non-binary and gender diverse people. We acknowledge the resilience demonstrated by our service users during the period. The theme of this report is a tribute to this.

In this first year of WIRE’s progressive strategic plan we have established a new internal structure to help us best deliver critical services and I projects for women, nonbinary and gender diverse people. We recognise our staff and volunteers’ many achievements this year. In particular, how they have engaged and supported diverse communities through the pandemic, using our unique approach that is guided by WIRE’s intersectional feminist framework.

With progress comes change and we have said goodbye to some very committed and talented directors, staff members and volunteers this year. Each person leaves behind a legacy of creating the organisation that WIRE is today and putting strong foundations in place for future growth. The Board sends our sincere thanks and best wishes to you all.

We are also very excited to welcome new staff members, volunteers and recently appointed directors. Collectively, we have a team of immense wisdom, skill, passion and motivation. Together, we are confident that we are well prepared to continue the incredible impact that WIRE makes on the community and continue to progress towards justice and equity for women, non-binary and gender diverse people.

The WIRE Board

I have been humbled and honoured to be appointed Chair of WIRE during the COVID-19 pandemic. In the second half of 2020 I will be joined by several new board members – brilliant women with diverse skills and experiences.

The impact of COVID-19 on women, nonbinary and gender diverse people makes WIRE’s services more important than ever. In 2021, WIRE will continue to advocate for a gender equal pandemic recovery and an intersectional approach to ending systemic discrimination.

Beverley Kliger,
Incoming Board Chair

MESSAGE FROM THE CEO

Resilience is a fitting theme for WIRE, now and always. It is part of our feminist framework, which recognises service users' resilience and resourcefulness as a starting point.

I see resilience and strength in people every day — in our staff, volunteers, board members, service users, and even in myself. It gives me hope that people can not only overcome great barriers, but work together to dismantle the systemic obstacles that cause harm, disadvantage and violence, and work towards a society where all people can thrive.

WIRE continues to evolve and build on our best practice WIRE service delivery model. We are building our intersectional practice — a process involving continual learning, reflection and change. This process takes strength, resilience, emotional labour, intellect and courage. For that, I thank everyone at WIRE, in particular, the WIRE Intersectionality Working Group, who lead the way as we continue to improve our practice and understanding of the intersection of gender, race, disability, sexuality, and other locations of oppression.

This pandemic exposes the vulnerability and weaknesses in our society, and it has found many. Many of those seeking support at WIRE have been made more vulnerable to COVID-19 and its impact because they are a victim-survivor of family violence, are in insecure work, or because of their financial situation or visa status. The pandemic has further exposed Australia's underbelly of racism, ageism, ableism and sexism — places of discrimination and oppression that increase vulnerability.

I have also witnessed multiple acts of resilience, strength and resistance at an individual and collective level — to fight back and overcome.

WIRE adapted to the pandemic restrictions quickly. Within three working days, our service delivery team was providing support to service users from home via phone, email and web chat. It was an extremely proud moment for me as CEO. We have continued to provide training for professionals and organisations throughout the lockdown. The way our trainers pivoted delivery from face-to-face to online was magnificent and in many ways has enabled us to reach new audiences.

Thank you to WIRE staff, pro bono professional volunteers, and phone room and Walk-In Centre volunteers who are the lifeblood of our organisation. I can't wait until we are back in the office with all our volunteers. Thank you to the WIRE Board that provides so much support to me. And a big thank you to our members, partners and funders that enable us to do the work we do.

Lastly, I want to thank our service users, who honour us with their stories of resistance, wisdom and strength. Your stories guide our service more than you will ever know.

Julie Kun, WIRE CEO

Service delivery during COVID-19

In response to COVID-19 lockdowns, our service delivery team quickly transitioned to providing support to service users remotely, by phone, email and web chat. The team stays connected throughout the day by videoconferencing in what we call 'the virtual phone room.'

Our Walk-In Centre has been closed since March, and we know this has been difficult for people who access WIRE services in person, including our computer and internet services. We have dedicated more resources to our email and web chat support to meet the needs of those who cannot safely contact us over the phone, and now deliver our legal and financial clinics remotely. We have also invested more time contributing to articles, webinars and podcasts to spread the message about how we can support the community.

Our support workers have been inspired by the resilience of those who've reached out to us during COVID-19. They have borne witness to more than a thousand stories from women, nonbinary and gender diverse people facing difficult and dangerous circumstances — including increased financial hardship, worsening family violence, housing stress and mental health challenges.

WIRE support workers

Listening to women and nonbinary folk's stories feels real. It takes courage to call up and share your deepest fears with someone you don't know. It takes strength, self awareness and vulnerability to tell a support worker you are not sure how you will get through a divorce. It takes kindness to call WIRE on behalf of a friend, neighbour or family member who is struggling with mental health, or at risk of homelessness.

As a phone worker, it feels great to be connecting to the real issues going on in people's lives right now, rather than what the politicians are saying on the news.

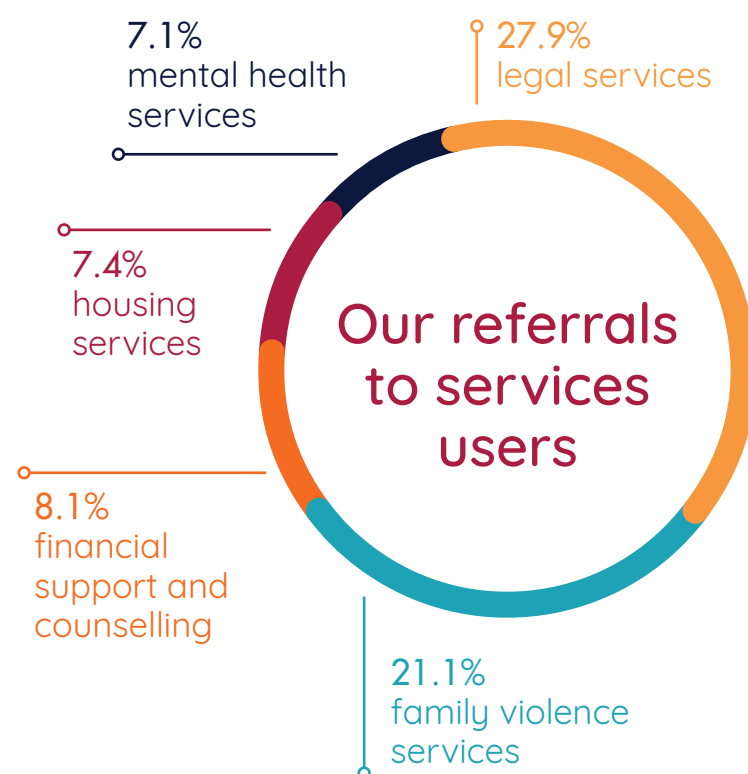

I feel that there is more of a need for our service now than ever. People are experiencing additional layers of challenges, lack of supports and added isolation. It feels like a privilege to have the opportunity to hear people's intimate thoughts and feelings throughout this pandemic, which is a unique position in our role.

To be able to offer the space to truly listen and hold space for someone during a time when that is less accessible than ever feels like an incredibly valuable experience. I am touched by the resilience and resourcefulness of the people that we support and I am hearing strengths in every corner of the conversations.

Covid-19

Contacts 'on behalf' of another person (e.g. customer, friend, family member, colleague) up by approx. 11% compared to pre-COVID-19 levels

We are here to listen. We are uplifted and heartened by your courage to reach out and call us. Our work is rewarding, real, and strangely grounding during this unpredictable time, because of the honesty and strength that we experience when we work with you.

We often refer to vicarious resilience – the resilience that we absorb from hearing your resilience, strength and personal power – that is what we take away from our work.

We are doing this work because we believe in the WIRE model and the collaborative experience of working together to support each other.

I came to WIRE after experiencing family violence. I had a bad experience with some other services, but I have always had a good experience with WIRE.

I think a lot of the time deep down, you know what you need to do. You just need someone to be there and listen without telling you what to do.

WIRE staff don't tell you what to do and they aren't judgemental. It's more empowering.

I feel like I have been through so much in life. During previous crisis experiences I have felt very alone, but right now I feel like everyone is in it together, which is a different feeling for me. This crisis doesn't feel isolating that way, and the things I learned through previous crisis situations are actually useful now.

This is a quote from a service user who has accessed WIRE's services for several years

My Money Conversation Kits distributed in less than 2 months

We're working to improve financial wellbeing

Our financial capability projects continue to shine a light on the structural and cultural changes needed to make financial wellbeing a reality for everyone. In the first stage of the Senior Women and Money Project — led by Lou Franklin and funded by the Victorian government — we held financial capability workshops for women, nonbinary and gender diverse people over 50. The My Money Conversation Kit was developed in response to the needs identified in the workshops. Women, nonbinary and gender diverse people are excluded from financial decision-making because they are told they don't have the right knowledge and words to be equal in money conversations. This is especially true of older people, who experience discrimination because of their age as well. Our My Money Conversation Kit empowers older women with the skills they need to take part in money conversations.

Part 3 of the Purse Project — led by Dr Nilmini Fernando and funded by the McNamee Foundation — brought financial wellbeing workshops to community service professionals who work with victim-survivors of family violence. The workshops focussed on recognising and responding to financial abuse, building financial wellbeing for victim-survivors, and intersectionality into practice.

Our Women's Financial Capabilities Project kicked off in 2019, led by Catherine Connolly and funded by the Victorian Government. The project is in partnership with GSANZ, and aims to improve the financial and economic security and confidence of women across Victoria, with a particular focus on First Nations women, women from migrant, refugee, and asylum-seeker backgrounds and women with disability. The project's co-design process centres marginalised women by ensuring their decision-making role at every stage of the project.

Our Sustainable and Transformative Employment Pathways (STEP) Project kicked off in 2020, led by Elyse McInerney and funded by the Commonwealth Bank as a part of the Next Chapter program. This pilot project will support victim-survivors of family violence to find employment and achieve greater financial wellbeing. The project will also develop and trial workplace standards to help employers to be more accessible and supportive of potential and existing employees who have experienced family violence. We are proud of the project's co-design process, which brought 8 HR specialists and 12 victim-survivors together to identify barriers to employment and brainstorm the strategies.

After the Royal Commission into Family Violence (Victoria) report, the Victorian government committed to supporting financial wellbeing programs, especially for women affected by family violence. In 2019 we ran a pilot project, Skilled Aware Resourceful Active: Financial wellbeing training for women (SARA) Project, written by Di Cramer and Julie Harper. The course aimed to support women to build confidence, knowledge and skill around managing their money to achieve financial wellbeing and financial dignity. It takes a trauma informed, strength based, behavioural change approach to building financial wellbeing. The projects' independent evaluator found that SARA was "achieving world class outcomes for women".

Following the successful pilot we are reviewing the course and expect to deliver the SARA training again in the first few months of 2021. The revised training is written by Julie Harper and Laura Chapman (Carrington Learn Local). In the second half of 2020, WIRE will embark on new projects, including our Respectful Financial Conversations Project (funded by the Credit Union of Australia) and our Intersectional COVID-19 Financial Capability Project, (funded by Ecstra Foundation).

We're upskilling professionals and community

We're continuing to use our profit for purpose training and free workshops to build knowledge of family violence, financial abuse, and how to work effectively and respectfully with women, nonbinary and gender diverse people. In response to COVID-19 restrictions, our training lead — Matilda Stevens — brought WIRE's Dealing with Difficult Calls training online. This has enabled us to continue sharing our knowledge of phone support work, which has been particularly important given the number of workers who have switched from face-to-face to phone supports.

We are also excited to be supporting Manal Shehab's Sisters4Sisters project to create a guide which supports faith leaders to respond to family violence and undertake prevention work in their communities.

We're making WIRE more accessible to older people

A growing number of older women, nonbinary and gender diverse people are seeking support through the community sector. In 2019 we embarked on the Better Access Project, to assess and improve access to our organisation and services for people over 50, led by Lou Franklin and Jane O'Hanlon, and funded by the Lord Mayor's Charitable Foundation. As part of the project WIRE produced a booklet and ran a launch event to share our learnings with other community organisations.

We're committed to intersectionality

Following reports of racist behaviour towards a support worker in the phone room and in the context of the development of intersectionality training for the Purse Project 3, WIRE began to more directly explore race and racial bias in service delivery. A number of WIRE staff of colour were consulted to develop a WIRE procedure to respond to racism. To continue that work and develop a comprehensive Action Plan, the Intersectionality Working Group was formed by Audrey Arjoun, Dr Nilmini Fernando, Monique Hameed and Manal Shehab. We are now seeking funds to support the group's Intersectionality Action Plan.

We are a work in progress. The way we work isn't always just, equitable and inclusive for people of colour — especially culturally and linguistically diverse people and migrants. We still have a long way to go, but we are learning.

I have stopped unconscious spending and I think about taking care of myself within my financial circumstances...

My money is in my control.

- SARA Participant

I now don't have panic attacks and I sleep so much better. I share all my money matters with my partner... before I never talked about money...

We laugh more. We look at ways to have time out without spending money.

- SARA Participant

I'm feeling more empowered to speak up for myself about money.

- SARA Participant

We conducted several thousand welfare check-in's with our participants immediately after the training due to COVID and the conversation strategies taken from the workshops were invaluable.

- Purse Project participant (National Organisation)

"...What has stood out for me is the way you talk about privilege.

A refocusing on the sites and situations of power and privilege rather than simply its impacts of oppression and marginalisation.

- Intersectionality training (Purse Project) participant

As a trainer stepped in this kind of work/analysis over a long time, I think this was an outstanding training and I will be reflecting of the material for a long time to come.

ADVOCACY

We're lending our support to important work across the sector

WIRE continues to be an active contributor at Domestic Violence Victoria, Respect Victoria services meeting, Gender Equity Victoria, Economic Abuse Reference Group and Thriving Communities Partnership.

Over the last year we contributed to Family Safety Victoria's Intersectional Practice Guide, Domestic Violence Victoria's Code of Practice (2nd edition), supported the Our Rights, Our Lives! Women say NO to the Religious Discrimination Bill campaign, and Gender Equity Victoria's Submission to the Parliamentary Enquiry into Gender Responsive Budgeting (Dec 2019).

We're collaborating to create innovative solutions to responding to family violence

WIRE, Economic Abuse Reference Group and Thriving Community Partnerships are co-leading a series of sessions called Don't Just Think Tank, which create an interactive space for non-community service organisations to find solutions to responding to family violence.

We're nurturing grassroots social justice advocates

We believe that persuasive narratives, transformative storytelling, key facts and shared values can shift the community attitudes which create the social context for gendered violence. In 2019 we launched our

Lead for Change workshops — led by Jessica Stott, and now, Anna Andersson — which provide participants with skills and support to further the social justice work they already do in their own communities.

We're working to shift community attitudes

In 2019 we launched 16 posters to mark the 16 Days of Gender Based Activism. Our posters went up on the back of phone booths in community, metro Melbourne and outer Melbourne. The posters encourage the reader to challenge rigid gender roles, call out sexism, practice consent, and believe victim-survivors.

We're sharing knowledge with government, community and industry

Through our speaking engagements, community education, information seminars and project work, we're spreading knowledge of the WIRE service delivery model, intersectional practice and awareness around family violence. In this work, we continue to highlight the intersectional nature of oppression and disadvantage. Our training is amplifying the voices of women, nonbinary and gender diverse people and bringing these voices to community, not-for-profit, and corporate organisations.

In 2019, WIRE staff member Dr Nilmini Fernando put forward a submission to the Royal Commission into Mental Health which highlighted the unique and significant correlation between financial abuse, family violence and mental health.

Over the last year we provided training to financial institutions around working with women, family violence and financial capability, and we worked with the Victims of Crime Commissioner, training their phone support staff and developing policy and procedures around contact with victims of crime.

We know that COVID-19 lockdowns have made it more difficult for women, nonbinary and gender diverse people experiencing family violence to access safety and support. During the lockdowns WIRE support workers organised Power Beyond the Crisis: Exploring Community Pathways to Safety – an online panel on community responses to family violence.

We're fighting for gender equity during COVID-19

COVID-19 lockdowns have hit women – who are more likely to be in lower paid work, or to have lost their jobs during COVID-19 – particularly hard. We are a signatory to Gender Equity Victoria's Women Unite joint statement calling for the government to recognise and respond to the gendered impact of COVID-19. We will continue to advocate for a gender equal recovery.

Resilience allows us to overcome difficulties or failure, to reaffirm our resolve, and rise up to continue the fight for equity.

While the pandemic has exacerbated existing inequalities in society, this exposure means there is an opportunity for action we need to focus on collective solutions to social injustice now more than ever.

History has shown time and again the courage, grit and resilience of women, especially in the face of adversity. But we don't need history to remind us - just look at the people in your life.

It was great to see WIRE quickly reinventing its services during COVID-19 so it could continue to help its service users to build the resilience they need to face even greater health, finance and caring challenges.

Our Volunteers

WIRE wouldn't exist without our volunteers. They support our work throughout WIRE — in the phone room, as well in computer tuition and the AMICA program. Professionals provide pro bono support to WIRE through our financial and legal clinics, and the speakers at our information seminars often volunteer their time.

From March, volunteers were no longer working in the phone room due to COVID-19 restrictions. We have continued to stay in touch with our volunteers during the lockdowns. Our Community of Practice — led by volunteer manager, Monique Hameed — brought WIRE staff and volunteers together to share reflections, knowledge and skills.

In the second half of 2020 we will run a pilot trial of volunteers in our 'virtual phone room' and hold skills workshops to equip volunteers with the knowledge and confidence they need to provide support to people affected by COVID-19. We hope to welcome our volunteers back into the phone room soon.

WIRE's Community of Practice has been such a highlight for me in 2020. It has kept me connected to the wonderful volunteers and staff at WIRE, all of whom I've missed so dearly.

It has also shown me WIRE's resilience, passion and dedication to providing the best service and support possible to service users, as well as WIRE's volunteers. Even though we have been forced to operate and connect digitally, the virtual CoP space for me is reminiscent of the safety and community that I have always felt when walking in and out of WIRE's doors.

It has also been so helpful in assisting my transition back into the digital phone rooms. I cannot thank Monique enough for organising and managing these sessions.
